

Defining Memory Care Services in Florida Assisted Living Communities

BACKGROUND

Of the 4.5 million adults 65 and older in Florida, over 500,000 have probable Alzheimer’s disease (AD),¹ and by 2025, that number is expected to rise to 720,000.² While most people who need care prefer to remain in their own homes, many need residential care. Assisted living communities (ALCs) provide supportive living arrangements for people who need assistance, though not a nursing home level of care. ALCs typically offer a range of services and activities for their residents, including memory care.

Florida is one of the few states with specific regulations for ALCs that want to advertise that they provide memory care services.³ According to the regulation, ALCs advertising memory care services must provide 24-hour security and supervision, implement activities that are specially designed for people with cognitive impairment, and offer training to staff about how to provide care specially tailored for people with AD.⁴ Given these requirements, this policy brief examines the services and activities offered by ALCs that also offer memory care. By comparison, it examines services and activities provided by non-memory care ALCs.

STUDY METHOD

Data was collected from the Florida Agency for Healthcare Administration (AHCA), * which has a legislative mandate to provide information about ALCs and their services. Information about each ALC’s services and activities can be found through the AHCA website, FloridaHealthFinder.gov.

The services used in these analyses were audiology, massage therapy, occupational therapy, pet therapy, physical therapy, speech therapy, water therapy, and other. The activities were arts and crafts, cooking, dancing, exercise, games/cards, gardening, music, shopping, social events/outings, theatre/movie, yoga, and other.

FINDINGS

Only 22% (n= 683) of ALCs in Florida offered memory care services. On average, these ALCs offered 3 services each, ranging from 1 to 9. Occupational therapy was offered most frequently, followed by physical therapy and pet therapy. Less frequently offered were massage therapy, audiology, and water therapy.

ALCs with memory care offered an average of 10 activities each. While some offered only a few activities, more than a third offered 12 different activities. Arts and crafts are offered in all but one ALCs with memory care, and nearly all offered dancing and games/cards. The activities less commonly offered were shopping, gardening, and cooking.
