Course Description

Expressive Arts through a play therapy lens is an evidence-based approach for counseling children. It is developmentally age-appropriate and utilizes children's natural tendency toward play. Play therapists meet children where they are and use toys as the medium of communication to help children identify and resolve distress.

Course Highlights

This course will provide students with a brief overview of the history, leading theories, and supporting research for expressive arts within current trends and practices.

Students will learn fundamental expressive arts techniques from a play therapy lens.

This course will prepare students to begin using expressive arts skills under supervision.

Who Should Take this Course

Any graduate student or professional with a related graduate degree interested in working with children.
